

Cornfields to Codfish
Acknowledgements

This is the hardest section to write as “thank you” seems not to convey all that these individuals have meant to me in creating Cornfields to Codfish.

Without the tenement of place, these essays wouldn't be, and so tied to those places are the members of my family in Boston, Iowa, and England. My hope is that these writings honor my grandparents, great aunts, great uncles, and other special souls whose presence throughout my childhood grounded me. Thanks to all of my family – especially Mom, Dad, Bill, Will, and Liam – as well as friends who are like family, for adventures, traditions, and memories.

Without the courage to pick up a pen, these essays wouldn't be, and over the last decade, Jennifer Doudous has been my life coach and my confidant. Despite living in Paris, she has an ever-optimistic presence in my writing.

Without other writers, these essays wouldn't be, and I have been incredibly lucky to have landed among many talented people from my first writer's critique group – Mary Baures, Jenny Pivor, Loren Schechter, and Diane Sharpe – to those who have read and critiqued my writing as Cornfields to Codfish came together – Dom Caposella, Sally M. Chetwynd, Colleen Getty, Robert Harvey, Marc Olivero, Lisa Perron, and Stephanie Sears. Writing itself is a solo exercise; the ability to meet others with the same passion has been an immeasurable benefit – through their critiquing and, even more so, through their camaraderie. Special thanks to my college friend and fellow Iowan cook, Donna Boots, who critiqued the recipe section with me by phone.

Without their grace in allowing me to reprint recipes from cookbooks and recipe cards, the recipe section wouldn't be. With special thanks to Therese Allen, Ina Garten, the Junior League of Eugene (Oregon), and to family and friends who've shared their recipes.

Without the wrestling of essays individually and as a whole, this book wouldn't be. At the New York State Summer Writers Institute in 2018, Lorrie Goldensohn, author and associate professor emeritus of English, Vassar College, tutored me and gave me invaluable guidance in how to step back and evaluate the structure of this work.

Without my volunteer beta readers, the people who agreed to read my Cornfields to Codfish manuscript cover to cover, this book wouldn't be. Ever so much thanks to those colleagues and friends who slogged through with pen in hand: Sally M. Chetwynd, Colleen Getty, Marc Olivere, Loren Schechter, Jacque Stouffer, and Lily Yamamoto.

Without creative talent, those energized souls who've made my book cover and my website shine, this book wouldn't be. With humble gratitude for the creative gifts you shared with me: Angie Carlyle, book cover photographer; Sally M. Chetwynd, book cover designer; Scott Levy, web designer; Helene Norton-Russell, author photographer.

Without thorough proofreading and a final readthrough, this polished work wouldn't be. Thank you to ProofreadingPal, a web-based company in Iowa, for thorough line-by-line attention. Much thanks to my friend and fellow Iowan, Judy Eide Knowler, for her gracious eye in reading the proof one last time before it went to print.

Without the guidance of iUniverse, this book wouldn't be. Senior Book Consultant, Brad Wilhelm, and Offset Print Project Manager, Kara Nelson, swept in at the last hour to help get this book to market at a fair price and within a very tight deadline.

Without the support of my dedicated readers over the last decade, my writing, these essays, and this book wouldn't be. To you I say, no matter how many stories I tell today to convey my thankfulness, there will always be a vast space that I cannot fill, as much as I try to shovel in the words – it's an unending crevice. Always indebted to your kindness and friendship.
